COMMENTARY

The Ellerston Australian Microcap Fund underperformed the S&P/ASX Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index by 2.66%, with the market finishing down 5.45%. The selloff was broad based with almost all sectors finishing in the red, Financials and Healthcare declined the most down over 10%, whereas Consumer Staples and Materials were the only sectors to finish slightly positive. Once again, the market selloff driven by macro factors, most noteworthy being the ongoing inflationary concerns and the potential for further rate hikes, along with escalating geopolitical tension in the Middle East.

Tyro (TYR AU) had a tough month, finishing down over 30% with the share price declining following its investor day. While the underlying business is performing well, the market was looking to the investor day for potential catalysts. Investors expected the company would look to return its banking license and/or outsource its payment switch which would potentially reduce costs and unlock capital. Both were retained which disappointed the market. Notwithstanding, the company did well to highlight the benefits and rationale of keeping these assets, which include material operating leverage in the banking business, and wholesale opportunities with the switch. We are also positive about the outlook for the health vertical which should continue driving strong growth in new merchants. SmartPay (SMP AU) had a tough month as well, dragged down by Tyro's comments about competitive pressures. We think both players remain well poised to continue taking share from the major banks, with an extensive runway still ahead.

Propel Funeral Partners (PFP AU) proved its defensiveness this month, putting on 4% in what was a tough month for markets. During the month the company confirmed recent media speculation around potential takeover activity, indicating the offers weren't compelling enough to consider. Regardless, we are attracted to the resilience of the company's earnings and cashflows, its strong pricing power which has protected its margins in the current inflationary environment. We think the company is best placed to consolidate what is a highly fragmented industry, with an extensive pipeline of acquisitions to make in the coming years. PFP remains one of our high conviction positions.

We continue to progress through AGM season and broker conferences, many of which include trading updates, outlook commentary or guidance. This is a great opportunity for us to explore new names and check in on our existing portfolio companies. The key themes we will be monitoring closely remain the same, most noteworthy being cost inflation and mitigation measures, discretionary spending and gearing levels. We also take this opportunity to do some travel, meeting with companies, prospects and unlisted peers ahead of blackout and the holiday period. We stick to our formula, looking for high quality companies, with healthy balance sheets and cash flow, pricing power along with strong and well aligned management teams. We are bottom-up stock pickers and welcome the volatility in our search of companies which offer our targeted risk/reward ratio.
